Amercanex Enters Into Strategic Agreement with International Cannabis Corporation

Amercanex and the International Cannabis Corporation (ICC) have partnered together to offer ICC products on the electronic trading platform ACExchange.

The new venture, announced this week, will streamline access and efficiency for ICC's global production network, generating real-time pricing, enhanced product offerings, and increased security and regulatory measures. It will also help maintain the high consistency and quality of the wide range of products offered by ICC.

ICC is a public company offering recreational, pharmaceutical and medical cannabis products. It was the first recreational cannabis producer to list on the TSX Venture Exchange. The company has a distribution network of more than 38,000 pharmacies across 17 countries.

A Message from the CEO

Our new partnership with the International Cannabis Corporation is an exciting new venture that will be of great benefit to both companies.

Amercanex's electronic platform ACExchange offers speed, transparency and efficiency across ICC's global network.

Streamlining the capabilities of ACExchange with ICC's technology platforms will result in greater consistency and higher quality of ICC's products and offerings.

Over the past five years, Amercanex has grown from a national to an international company.

We are proud of the growth and hard work of our team members, and look forward to working with our colleagues at ICC to accomplish even greater things ahead.

Sincerely,

Steve Janjic, CEO

Canada Already Faces Cannabis Shortage

It's only been two weeks since Canada legalized recreational cannabis, and the country is already running low on supply.

Licensed retail shops have already been forced to close until they receive shipments of products, which other retailers have experienced half-filled and damaged orders, leading to depleted inventories.

Experts had predicted that Canada would need time to get their supply chain up and running. The new industry is radically different than others in Canada, and the growing season means distributors and wholesalers had to wait for product to actually grow before harvesting and manufacturing. Strict government regulation has also added to delays, as growers can't plant their crops before obtaining the proper documentation.

Recreational and medical marijuana is expected to hit sales of approximately $6.5

billion each year, a huge factor in Canada's economy.

Many stores opened on October 17 with low inventory because of shipment delays and dwindling stock. Online retailers fared even worse. Customers encountered glitches, sold out products and website crashes. British Columbia sold out of its least expensive products the same day.

Growers and manufacturers are working around the clock to replenish supply. Many customers have shrugged off the issues, just happy that the commodity which has been illegal is now able to be purchased online and in stores.

Canada's cannabis shortage illustrates a good example to other countries considering legalization efforts: Make sure growing permits, retail licenses and inspections are completed before the legalization deadline arrives.

Legislative Updates: Upcoming Elections

As Election Day nears on November 6, candidates for the House and Senate have taken stances on legalizing cannabis. Currently, 30 states and the District of Columbia have passed either medical or recreational legalization legislation.

Cannabis remains illegal at the federal level, but the election may soon change that. Although both Republican and Democrat candidates have supported legalizing cannabis, the Democratic party has shown more support. And because 6 out of 10 Americans agree on legalizing cannabis on some level, the number of candidates in favor of supporting cannabis reform has grown as well.

New legislation, such as the Medical Cannabis Research Act, would grant more licenses to grow medical cannabis for research purposes.

Additionally, the House Veteran Affairs Committee passed legislation in May supporting research on the medical benefits of cannabis by the US Department of Veterans Affairs.
